Issued February 2024

Profit after tax amounted to $14.3m for the nine months, being 10% higher than the prior year result

Earnings

Whitefield reports a profit after tax for the nine months ended 31 December 2023 of $14,335,845. This outcome represents an increase of 10% compared to the equivalent nine months in the prior financial year.

After allowing for increases in capital across the year, the result translates to earnings per ordinary share for the nine-months of 11.9 cents, an increase of 5.7% compared to the prior year equivalent.

Stronger earnings growth in the December quarter was evident in three of the major banks – ANZ, NAB and Westpac. Over the same period the emerging softness in economic conditions resulted in cuts to dividends from investment bank Macquarie Group, property trusts and some stocks within the retail, chemicals and fertiliser sectors.

WHITEFIELD

A structured and disciplined investment strategy consistently applied over time.

Portfolio Return

The investment portfolio generated a return of 8.1% for the quarter and 9.1% for the 9 months of the financial year to date to December 2023.

Equity market returns in November and December were particularly strong, in a period where the headline inflation rate subsided from its prior highs and bond yields fell.

Stronger returns in the quarter came from holdings in James Hardie, CSR, Super Retail Group, the property trust sector, Seek, REA and Cochlear.

Less favourably performing stocks included Treasury Wines, Endeavour Group, ResMed and Qantas.

This very sharp rally in the market saw many small capitalisation stocks that rate unfavourably on earnings metrics bounce rapidly in price – an outcome which at least temporarily benefits benchmark indexes relative to Whitefield's portfolio. (Whitefield typically holds an underweight exposure towards businesses with less favourable earnings metrics). This same positioning benefitted Whitefield's investment return performance relative to market in the subsequent January month.

Market Outlook

While economic growth has slowed in the second half of 2023, global and Australian business conditions remain mildly positive at this time.

Australian employment has so far remained firm and unemployment is low. Government, healthcare and education services are increasing. Residential, commercial and infrastructure construction works are continuing.

Notwithstanding these positive influences, consumers are increasingly faced with higher costs of living and businesses with higher costs of operation.

Costs of food, services, travel, rent and mortgage interest are all materially higher than in prior years. This pressure on the consumer has translated into lower volumes of retail sales and some increases in mortgage arrears.

Rising costs of operation for businesses coupled with the prospect of lower consumer demand have seen decreases in discretionary business spending and growing caution in hiring new staff.

As we move forward into 2024, the ongoing transition of borrowers to current interest rates (from the lower levels of prior years) will continue to weigh on consumer spending. The passing of time however will increasingly see the consumer benefitting from the recently announced tax cuts, a growing level of wage increases (many of which have already been announced) and falls in some areas of cost (such as energy prices and volatile food items).

The recent falls in headline inflation have also had the benefit of decreasing the pressure on central banks to further tighten monetary policy.

This mixed outlook which contains a blend of positives and negatives may create an environment across 2024 where interest rates are relatively stable (fluctuating within a limited range) and where economic activity progresses at mildly positive rates.

While the lower headline inflation rate of recent months is encouraging, the influence of steadily rising wages and its flow on to the pricing of goods and services is a persistent and ongoing process. Accordingly we continue to consider it likely that medium term inflation and interest rates will remain at levels over future years that are higher than the particularly low levels evident across the last decade.

Risks for investment markets at the present time include the continuing trade, political and military unrest and dispute in eastern Europe, the middle east and Asia. The maturing of China's economic growth profile and its ability to digest any excesses of production and debt also remains an area of potential uncertainty over the next year.

We will look forward to reporting to investors on our full year outcome subsequent to our financial year end at 31st March 2024.
